Video Safe 7.0.49.28 reviewSlideshow (2 images) MANILA (Reuters) - China will allow exports of Philippines rice by reducing the value added tax, Philippine trade minister Ramon Lopez said on Wednesday, as the two countries continued to find middle ground on a dispute that has caused a surge in demand for their produce. A meeting in Beijing by officials from the two countries last week to discuss the trade row failed to reach a deal, giving the Philippine government the opening to seek more access to China's market for its rice and other agricultural products. China is the biggest importer of Philippine rice and this year posted its biggest year-on-year rise in imports by a large margin. "We have agreed that we will reduce the value added tax from 7% to 5%," Lopez told reporters in Davao City. China stopped imposing the 7% tax on rice exports to the Philippines after it raised tariffs on imports of frozen pork in July, although its trade ministry has indicated it will continue to apply the tax on imports of Philippine mangoes. The two countries have for the first time in a decade also opened talks on investigating alleged ship-to-ship transfers of goods by the Chinese government, after last year, when Chinese vessels were involved in the arrest of a Philippines drug courier and the seizure of shiploads of Philippine grains in disputed waters in the South China Sea. Lopez also said officials from China had agreed to "take legal steps" against any entities that have illegally moved gambling games to the country. Lopez said they had reached a deal on a memorandum of understanding for working in the Philippines for Chinese companies. The Philippines said on Tuesday there had been progress in talks to resolve a long-simmering row between the two neighbors, but that differences remained.Q b7e8fdf5c8
